OUR CONGRESSMAN

By Hal E. Roach.

Will Rogers very much interested in the public welfare in his local town is sent to Congress by his fellow townsmen. It doesn't take Rogers long to get accustomed to Washington atmosphere and soon he is playing golf and enjoying himself with the rest of the law-makers. His downfall is almost precipitated when, one day, the delegation from his town calls to visit him and they are told that he is in conference. They believe it until leaving the grounds adjoining their Congressman's house when they see him playing golf. Being a resourceful man and having learned much even during his brief stay in Washington, he quickly and cleverly extricates himself from an apparently hopeless quandary.
